

Welcome to MUSEUMS AND CHILL

A one-of-a-kind podcast, where museum practitioners and thinkers from all over the world will discuss their inspiration, strategies, innovations and challenges. With episodes in English, French Spanish, we aim at giving a platform to cultural voices from all over the world.

How can museums create connection in an increasingly divided world?

For this special International Museum Day episode of Museums and Chill – The ICOM Podcast, we visited Queer Britain in London to speak with Andrew Given, Director of Queer Britain, about the evolving role of museums today and the responsibilities cultural institutions hold within their communities.

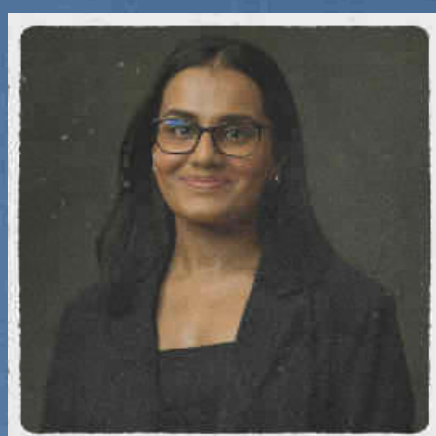

Museums Uniting a Divided World

This conversation explores how Queer Britain approaches these questions through programme-making, community engagement, and institutional leadership.

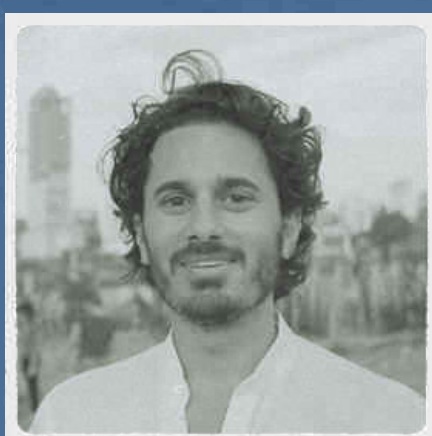

Andrew Given
Museum Director, Queer Britain

Some of our guests

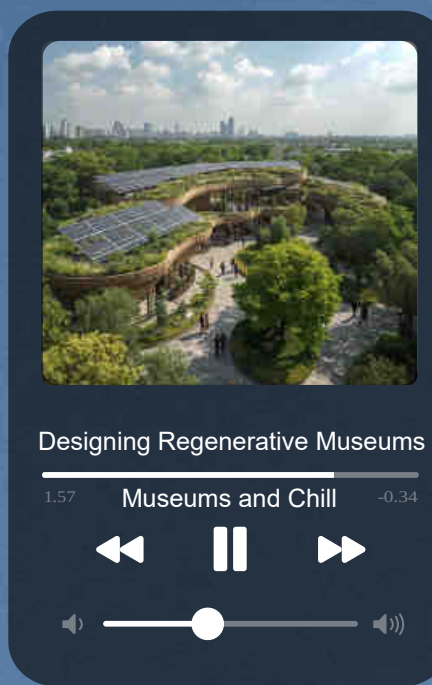

Abhirami Suresh
Curatorial Projects Coordinator,
Jameel Arts Center

Adib Dada
Forest Maker, theOtherDada

Dra. Patricia Galeana
Fundadora y directora,
Museo de la Mujer

About the Host and Producer (in English and Spanish)

Based in Paris, Anapaula García Soto is a Communications Coordinator at the International Council of Museums (ICOM) and the voice behind Museums and Chill.

She works at the intersection of culture and storytelling, amplifying museum professionals and fresh perspectives from across the globe.

LISTEN ON Spotify